DOUBLE THE BENEFITS – DOUBLE THE FUN

The Benefits of USNSCC and NJROTC

What is the use of being in two Navy oriented programs? That is the question that has been asked many times. It is true that the United States Navy sponsors both the United States Naval Sea Cadet Corps and the Naval Junior Reserves Officer Training Corps; however, they both offer something unique that the other doesn't. Being in both of these outstanding programs gives a young adult the best the two programs have to offer.

First off, the benefits of Sea Cadets are awe-inspiring alone. The advanced trainings offer experiences that no other organizations offer. These experiences can range anywhere from driving a 42' Coast Guard Cutter in Maine to water survival training in Portsmouth, England, to training with Navy Ceremonial Guardsmen in Texas. The Sea Cadets present the ability to live on military bases in other states and even in other countries. While on the base, the cadets not only acquire the knowledge given by the instructors, but also knowledge on life on a military base through observations.

NJROTC gives the opportunity to exercise constant military discipline on a day-to-day basis. By being exposed to a military-like surrounding everyday at school, students learn how to keep their bearing. This bearing is tested during the extensive training in military drill. The students that are open to learning are given the opportunity to have far-reaching knowledge on the United States Marine Corps Drill and Ceremonies Manual. Also, to accomplish its main goal of promoting better citizenship, the current event lessons give students in NJROTC an in-depth awareness of the happenings of the environment surrounding them.

By being in both of these programs, not only does one get the benefits named above, but many others. Self-discipline is a quality that is taught in both programs. Also, a comprehension of military and civilian history is available in both programs. This includes topics such as early European history, The American Revolution, Civil War and so on. Furthermore, cadets are given the possibility of getting in shape and keeping a degree of personal fitness. The Sea Cadets and NJROTC both have physical training programs to help cadets achieve this. Participation in both programs also gives an increased probability of exercising leadership potential and abilities.

In conclusion, the benefits of being in both the USNSCC and NJROTC are compounded by each other. The unique experiences from advanced trainings coupled by the day-to-day experiences from the NJROTC class give a new experience to cadets. A great cadet in one program makes a great cadet in the other and offers the experiences of that cadet to both.
